

In a civilized society, the criminal justice system arrests and prosecutes individuals, and does not hand out collective punishments and selective justice. This lesson was learned from the wrongful internment of Ukrainian, Italian and Japanese Canadians during World Wars I and II.

Through the Immigrant and Refugee Protection Act, people in Canada can be arrested and detained through a security certificate process, and never see the entire evidence against them. This violates their fundamental right to a fair trial. We call on the Canadian government to:

- Rewrite the Immigrant and Refugee Protection Act to eliminate the legalization of secret evidence, and until then, immediately ensure that:
- due process is followed no matter the race or religion of the person under suspicion, and
- the presumption of innocence is maintained until a detainee is found guilty in a proper court of law.
